

THE TRANS-SIERRA LIZARD TRIP

Ten years and twenty-eight trips ago, The Grand Imperial, O'Man, and The Lone Lizard slithered and bungled their way from the West side of the High Sierra to the East side with a little side jaunt up the highest peak in the Continental U.S. - Mt. Whitney (which, by the way, also boasts the highest outhouse in the land: "Homo nihil est sed porter turpis!"). Surprisingly, these three intrepid reptiles are still alive and want to repeat their incredible feat. Even more astounding is the fact that six other idiots have decided to join them!

To enable those with better judgement (i.e., anyone who is not going) to follow along in the comfort of their home and at the same time derive some sadistic pleasure, the elevation and mileage graphs which appear on this commemorative YIP! insert were commissioned by The Great Guana and depict highlights of the original misadventure along with "planned" overnight camps for the upcoming escapade.

The Lizards will depart the afternoon of August 13th in a fifteen passenger van piloted by Dale (who agreed to chauffeur the Lizards after a few gallons of beer). The hike commences early Monday morning and hopefully concludes on Sunday the 20th with the promised arrival of J.R. and plenty of debriefing supplies.
